

Video 11: Narcissism on a Cosmic Scale Part 2 (Transcript)

by Wes Penre and Ariel Glad, May 27, 2018

Now, let's back up a little bit from the last video and look at the Queen's potential motives and connect this to the origin of narcissism. After having heavily participated in wars and conquests for some time, but then started taking the path of peace and harmony, She, being a direct manifestation of the Divine Feminine, must have pondered that the continuous wars and conflicts in the KHAA had something to do with Herself and what She set in motion earlier. The Divine Feminine just is, but her soul splinters' experiences that previously only existed as potential inside Her, creates new insights about Herself. The Queen, and all the star races that eventually were created across the Universe, formed their own personalities out of freewill, which is the freedom to make individual choices.

Although the Queen had decided that She now would create peace and harmony in the Empire, and it had very positive effects in general, a conflict started developing within Her own family. Her oldest son, Prince Enki, was the Crown Prince of Orion, while his younger brother, Prince Ninurta, also known as Prince Enlil, was a Prince. It was therefore natural that the Queen started teaching Enki a lot of things She considered valuable if he was going to sit on the throne of Orion one day. Among all these things, She taught him science, how to create life, and how to genetically engineer a species, until Enki became a mastermind in most of the sciences. Enki became a Creator god par excellence.

However, it was also noted that Prince Ninurta had some extraordinary talents—particularly as a strategist and a leader. In addition, he was well respected and liked by the Orions in general. Therefore, instead of making Enki the Commander of the Orion MIKH-MAKH warriors and get the title "Archangel MIKH-a-El," (Michael), the task went to Ninurta. This made Enki very upset, but he kept his inner jealousy, feeling of rejection and humiliation inside to begin with. But Ninurta also had many other talents that superseded Enki's, and these talents were rewarded, although Enki thought that he, as the Crown Prince, should be rewarded these tasks as well. Thus, at one point or another, Enki spoke up and became obstinate. He refused to accept his parents' decision to favor his younger brother. When this was noticed, he was reprimanded and stripped of more of his privileges, until one day, he was told that because of his behavior, he was no longer considered to be the successor of the throne. Instead, his younger brother took over the title as Crown Prince of Orion. Ninurta had developed into what we call the "Golden Child" and Enki became the "Scapegoat;" the neglected child.

Enki felt hurt, ashamed, robbed of his pride, rejected, abandoned, mistreated by his own family, and he felt he lost face in front of the inhabitants of the Empire. This became the ignition that started Lucifer's Rebellion. Brother turned against brother, and Ninurta, who was prepared to sacrifice his own life in order to keep his mother, stepfather, siblings, and the Empire safe, used his MIKH-MAKH warriors against the rebels and threw them out of Orion. He also banned them and his brother from coming back.

A rebellion was the last thing the Queen had anticipated would happen, and She started pondering if She'd done something wrong. Wasn't it common sense to choose someone that was fit for the task to become the Crown Prince of Orion; in this case Prince Ninurta? Why couldn't Her oldest son understand this? As a mother, She sought for solutions to fix this problem, so the family unit could eventually unite again.

Perhaps it was then She realized that Her warlike side still influenced Her behavior, and She acted out from old habits instead of implementing Her benevolent traits. Apparently, by reprimanding Enki, he became rebellious, instead of conforming to Her will. This was maybe something the Queen hadn't considered would happen at that time. Also, if this was the case, what else of her warlike "shadow side" was She acting out on, without being aware that this was the case? Was there a way to find out, and could there be some way to integrate the shadow side with the peaceful side and thus be more in control of Her own behavior?

Perhaps at this point, the Human Experiment started to take form in the Queen's mind. What if She could create an Experiment where She participated directly and played the major role, in order to learn more about this? Therefore, She embodied Herself as two planets in our solar system. These planets were Tiamaat and Mars. Then, with assistance from Her son, Ninurta, and the Vegans/Vulcans, the planetary bodies were populated with plants, animals, and a species that I called the Namlu-u in the Wes Penre Papers (WPP). They became the primordial humankind, and they were created directly from Nature. The souls that inhabited humans and other creatures and plants of the planet were, and are, Her direct soul splinters. These souls were created here, in this solar system and are therefore an extension of Her—it's all Her in a "lesser" form.

The purpose was to create a harsh environment with obstacles, hostility, and hardship to overcome. She wanted to experience Herself in this environment via her soul splinters to see if all these beings could work things out on these harsh worlds and overcome conflicts and wars and end up as loving and compassionate beings, where everybody worked together to evolve and graduate from the Experiment. If this would be successful, the Queen could use this model elsewhere in the Universe, in order to bring peace and harmony. And mainly, this could help the Queen to understand more about Herself, so She can avoid decisions coming from Her shadow side rather from a place of love and compassion. In our terms, She had a desire to reintegrate her shadow side with her more compassionate side to bring insights that She can use from thereon. This also implies that the planets themselves have this "split" between shadow and light, and so did we humans already at the time we started out as Namlu-u.

While there were bumps on the road in the beginning, the Experiment worked quite well, until Enki and his rebels invaded the solar system, destroyed Tiamaat and Mars, killed and captured Vulcans and humans, and took over the Experiment. A chunk of Tiamaat, which is now the asteroid belt, was thrown out of orbit from nuclear impact and eventually became Earth. After this so-called "Titan War" in Greek mythology, Enki used the skills he learned from his mother and terraformed Earth, where he continued the Experiment on his terms. Tiamaat was a gigantic planet, while Earth is not, so Enki had to remodel the lifeforms to fit the new planet. Thus, everything became significantly smaller in size; so also the human race, and Homo sapiens were born. This new, remodified species was then getting inhabited by the former Namlu-u souls that had been captured, and these souls are us.

Despite that Prince Ninurta and his MIKH-MAKH troops were defeated in the Titan War because they were taken by surprise by the invaders, wouldn't it be a relatively simple task for Orion to take back the solar system from Enki and stop his own Experiment in the cradle before he had the chance to terraform Earth? After all, the Orion troops vastly outnumbered the invaders.

The answer is yes, they could, but they didn't for many reasons. First, the invaders kept the human soul group as hostage, and second, the Experiment was based on freewill of choice, and the Experiment was still ongoing. No one had expected Enki to interfere and make things worse and much harder for humans, but it happened as a part of freewill. The Queen didn't want to terminate the Experiment because something unexpected happened—to have unexpected things happen was and is part of the process, so Enki was allowed to do his thing, but on one condition: when souls graduated, he had to promise to send these souls back to Orion as a part of the original plan and ruleset, and Enki agreed.

At first, Enki did send back graduating souls, but then figured out that he could use these souls for his own purposes, and he stopped sending souls to Orion in addition to breaking other rules that were set for this particular Experiment. He quarantined Earth and the entire solar system, so humans could no longer report back to Orion about what was happening here, and the Saturn stargate, which is a direct portal to the Orion Empire, was sealed and guarded.

This was the point where the Queen lost her patience. She stripped Enki and his rebels of their avatars, which also robbed them of their abilities as Creator gods, and the rebels became isolated here, immobile without their avatars. They now became totally dependent upon us humans for their survival because they could no longer draw soul energy from the Central Fire of the Universe, where the rest of the star races, including humans, draw their energy. Therefore, the Alien Invader Force (the A.I.F.) had to draw energy from us humans and use us as their avatars in order not to succumb. This was done by manipulation and to create polarity, which in this contained environment made us trapped here. Our own consciousness becomes restricted by seeing polarities as boundaries, outside which we, in our manipulated state, can't perceive. Furthermore, the A.I.F. got us trapped in this small band of the electromagnetic spectrum we call the spectrum of light—Lucifer/Enki, being the Light-bringer. Thus, we now, in general, can only experience what we identify with our five senses, and we can therefore only perceive 4% of the entire Universe—the rest manifests in our minds as Dark Energy and Dark Matter, being invisible to our senses.

The A.I.F. now were forced to become vampires, and they started feeding off our soul energy to the best of their ability. Via ancestry, they manifested parts of themselves in the human DNA, and from there, they can suck us out. However, the problem was that they also had to manipulate us in order to get as much out of us as they needed in order to get enough life energy to sustain themselves. Therefore, they no longer sent graduated souls to Orion, but instead started sending depleted souls back that were so drained that they barely had any soul energy left, and the A.I.F. kept the more intact souls to themselves. This is true up to this day.

Because we humans have freewill, we are to some degree difficult to control; we have the freedom of choice, and we are, as Barbara Marciniak's "Pleiadians" point out, unpredictable. Enki and his cohorts noticed the same thing, and because they can't physically enter our realm, they had some difficulties with controlling us remotely. Although they put the Illuminati Elite here on Earth to do the job for them, they needed an additional tactic. Thus, Enki came up with a plan to be able to manipulate people on a more direct and intimate level, in order to be more in control over the energy volume they need from them to stay alive. At this point, humankind was already much traumatized from war, religion, unfair laws and rules, and many other types of manipulation. This already made us fragmented, which is the key state they perpetually need to keep us in for us to stay anchored in this reality; something we will discuss later. However, it wasn't enough; they wanted us traumatized around the clock. On the other hand, according to the ruleset for the Experiment, the A.I.F. also needed to think about letting souls evolve and to allow us to have freewill, and eventually, Enki figured out how to do it.

The idea was to create completely fragmented souls and send them down here to traumatize individuals directly—in other words, the A.I.F. wanted to create full-blown narcissists to mingle with the rest of the population, coming across as regular human beings with a manipulative mannerism that we humans could just write off as “human behavior.” It’s not that narcissism hadn’t existed here before; it had! It seems like the A.I.F. had already started that project by making Elite leaders narcissistic, but now they wanted to bring this phenomenon down one step further, so that everybody, more or less, could be affected in face-to-face interaction with fellow human beings.

YouTube address: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4TbcZIO5YhI&t=5s>