Before listening to this video, please first listen to our videos 45 and 46, or this video won’t make sense.

Since Ariel and I put out videos 45 and 46 about how the Overlords split the soul into pieces in the Between Lives Area (BLA) before the soul is reincarnated into the Earth realm again, we have received mixed reactions. To many, our information makes sense, while others doubt that this is happening. In addition to anonymous sources, we also gave a reference to remote viewer Brett Stuart’s video (see description boxes below videos 45 and 46). Brett brings up this subject from personal experience while remote viewing, although he doesn’t get into the most delicate details about it. However, he also said there is more to know about this, but he will address it in a future video or videos. He was not very comfortable with relaying this information because of its nature, but he felt it needed to be known. Ariel and I are of the same opinion.

Since then, it has been brought to our attention that this phenomenon has been known for a very long time in human history. Both the Taoists and the old shamans knew about this, and it was part of their worldview. I researched it, and I found the reference in a book by Bruce Kumar Frantzis, “The Great Stillness: Body Awareness, Moving Meditation & Sexual Chi Gung,” pp. 32-33. A link to this book will be in the description box below this video. Here is the excerpt:

“Many Taoists believe that the vast majority of human beings do not have the capacity to reincarnate intact. They believe that when a soul dies, its consciousness breaks up and later combines with parts of other fragmented souls, thereby reincarnating as a mosaic soul. The idea is also represented in other traditions, especially shamanic ones, where it’s held that a human’s body can be composed from different past lives of various entities. Thus, some Taoists believe that the human desire to become integrated is based on a literal need.”

“The primary spiritual purpose of the preparatory and intermediate chi practices of Taoist meditation for achieving spiritual maturity involved gathering all the energies of an individual into one integrated, whole energy or consciousness. This unified energy/consciousness creates a ling, the Chinese word for “soul.” A unified ling can reincarnate intact; a fragmented or nonintegrated human consciousness cannot.”

“Since many Taoists believe that most people will not come back as a unified being, they consider talking about reincarnation to be a waste of time.” [...] “By placing attention on the living human body and on Consciousness (which they deem to be immortal), Taoists hold that focusing on this present life as equally important as giving credence to the concept of an afterlife.”

In our first series of videos about narcissism, we also talked about the soul being fragmented, and how it needs to be reintegrated. This entire reintegration process is described in detail in Taoism, and they had their own way of working on soul reintegration—something they often worked on for an entire lifetime.

Thus, the soul fragmentation is nothing new and nothing we are making up. This goes back to old shamanism. It’s just being reintegrated into our society again through our videos and Brett Stuart’s remote viewing work, as well as other sources.
